Dear Supporters,

There are so many people suffering from war, conflict, natural disaster, poverty, and injustice in the world today. And there are many wonderful organizations working to help people in need. We know that our supporters donate money to many causes, and we applaud this. There are people who are at this moment experiencing such extreme suffering that giving them aid must be the highest priority. At the same time, we must collectively strive to help everyone in need, from the refugee child in a war-torn region to the child seeking to rise out of poverty through education in a privileged country like the United States. As you are deciding how to allocate your charitable contributions this year in a world of such tremendous and various need, we hope that you will continue to find a place for us on your list, and we are writing to update you on our work.

Senegal remains among the poorest countries in the world, and it is struggling to retain its role as a stable, peaceful democracy in a region plagued by conflict. We are proud of our investment in the education and health of children and families in Senegal, and we believe that by helping the individuals we serve, we are also making a small but valuable contribution to the stability of this country, which is an important friend of the United States.

We are run entirely by volunteer efforts on the US side, and the donations that you send go directly to support our programs and the programs of our partner organizations on the ground. We work with people and organizations that we have personally known for many years, and they have consistently demonstrated their commitment to honoring these donations by using them in the most effective and efficient ways.

We started nearly twelve years ago by providing school supplies, and we continue to provide supplies for thousands of school children each year. In addition, we have provided new elementary school classrooms, a computer lab, a preschool program, educational materials, a literacy program, a rural research program, medical supplies, thousands of mosquito nets, support of a rural health clinic, health care for mothers and infants, medical transportation, Ebola prevention, HIV prevention, and meals to homeless children.

Whether you are able to send a few dollars or a few thousand dollars, you can rest assured that 100% of the money will continue to go directly to supporting these programs, which have consistently provided important services for more than a decade. Thank you for your continued support!

Yours truly,

Luke Klein and Phyllis B. Taylor
